Caring in Our Communities

When we think of businesses in Virginia, too often we think only of the good jobs they provide, the quality products and services they produce, and the tax base they represent. However, Virginia businesses are about so much more.

Every day, in thousands of different ways, Virginia's businesses touch their communities with helping hands and loyal support. They sponsor Little League teams, buy ads in school yearbooks, donate food to shelters, adopt highways, and set up the Special Olympics. They rally employees to participate in civic functions and donate the time to make it possible. They generously give to the arts, local charities and environmental projects.

Join the Virginia Department of Business Assistance in thanking them for the positive and lasting impact they make with their civic involvement, financial support of charitable causes, and sharing of their resources within our communities. In the Commonwealth of Virginia, businesses care in their communities.
